Latest Featured Headlines

Children become targets of identity theft

Identity theft is a problem that affected more than 8 million Americans in 2008, but con artists are always finding new ways to exploit security flaws. The latest scheme employed by thieves is stealing the social security numbers of children in order to establish fraudulent lines of credit. Identity thieves are using computers to find dormant Social Security numbers that aren't being used.

Credit card companies: fewer delinquencies in July

With the economy stabilizing, several major credit card companies are reporting fewer delinquencies in July as compared to previous months, meaning consumers' credit reports could be on the rise in the near future. Finance managers may want to take note of these changes in Americans' credit behavior as they look to make profitable loans for their dealerships.
